Behavioral Workshop Topics for Providers

Talking to Parents about Sensitive Issues

This workshop helps Early Childhood Education and Development Professionals learn positive techniques and strategies to use when discussing health, behavioral, or any other challenging topics with parents. Focus is on family centered practices.

Understanding Anger

Anger shouldn't be "managed" but understood as a normal healthy human emotion that can be expressed and vented in positive socially acceptable ways.

Self-Esteem

This workshop helps professionals understand how fragile a young child's self-esteem is, and teaches them to build and maintain a healthy positive sense of self.

What do you do with the mad that you feel? (KPBS)

This workshop, designed by KPBS and starring Mr. Fred Rogers, helps parents understand a child's anger, its purposes, and a way to address unwelcome behaviors.

About Conflict (KPBS)

This KPBS workshop is designed to assist parents in learning to face and become confident dealing with conflict both within and outside of the home.

Reframing Discipline (Educational Productions Workshops)

This powerful training series is a unique learn-and-practice format. It helps identify attitudes about discipline, explore new ways to view conflict and problem solving. It emphasizes how positive adult-child relationships help to reduce discipline problems and models ways to encourage these relationships.

Preventing Discipline Problems (Educational Productions Workshops)

This series, in a learn-and practice format, emphasizes the strategies that create classrooms with more cooperative behavior and fewer discipline problems. It emphasizes planning, identifying positive classroom rules and helping children understand and learn about classroom expectations.

Hand-in-Hand (Educational Productions Workshops)

Seven videos show how to intentionally support cognitive, language and social-emotional development in a play-based learning environment. Helps increase observation skills and models how to intervene with children who are missing out on learning.
